Returning Officer for Cuddalore Parliamentary Constituency

Appeal against the order of the Election Tribunal, Chingleput dated 31st January, 1958, and made in O.P. No. 9 of 1957.

This appeal coming on for hearing on Thursday, 11th December, 1958 Monday 15th December, 1958 and having stood over for consideration till this day, the Court delivered the following.

JUDGMENT

(Judgment of the Court delivered by the Honourable the Chief Justice).

This is an appeal against the order of the learned District and Sessions Judge, Chingleput who was appointed Election Tribunal to try and dispose of an election petition filed by S. Radhakrishnan, the appellant before us, in respect of an election for a seat in the Lok Sabha from the Cuddalore Parliamentary Constituency, which took place on the 6th March, 1957. The appellant, S. Radhakrishnan, the first respondent, T. D. Muthukumaraswami Naidu, and the second respondent, N. D. Govindasami Kachirayar, were the three candidates contesting for the seat. The Returning Officer declared the first respondent to be the successful candidate. According to him, the votes polled by the three candidates were as follows:—

S. Radhakrishnan	.. 98,546
Muthukumaraswami Naidu	.. 98,605
Govindaswami Kachirayar	.. 34,549

There were 158 invalid votes. The appellant filed the election Petition challenging the election of the first respondent on various grounds. He prayed that the election of the first respondent be declared void on the several grounds he alleged in his petition. He further prayed that a re-count be ordered after hearing him and that he may be declared elected as a result of the re-counting if as a result of the re-counting he became entitled thereto. At the time of the trial of the Petition learned counsel for the appellant Petitioner made an endorsement on the main petition that he was not pressing the grounds alleged by him on which he prayed that the election of the first respondent may be set aside and that he confined himself to the relief of recount and scrutiny and for a declaration in his favour on foot of such scrutiny and recounting. The learned Election Tribunal therefore considered the question whether the appellant was entitled to a recount and scrutiny. Though the first respondent to whom we shall refer hereafter as the respondent, opposed the application for recount, the Tribunal by its order dated 26th November, 1957 allowed the Petition in so far as it prayed for a recount. He found that it was necessary to have a recount of the ballot papers other than the 158 rejected ballot papers. He directed that the recount may be done in his presence with such help from the Revenue Officials as may be available. The procedure to do adopted for recount and scrutiny was laid down in great detail and the recounting went on from 7th January, 1958 till 10th January, 1958. As the learned Tribunal says, though it was a very arduous process, the recounting and scrutiny were done so carefully and thoroughly that both sides expressed that they were satisfied with the way in which it was done. Votes of the appellant and the first respondent alone were counted as both the parties stated that it was unnecessary to recount the votes of the second respondent. As a result of the recount the Tribunal held that the total number of votes polled for the first respondent was 98,592 while the votes in favour of the appellant were 98,576. The main objection to the learned Tribunal's finding regarding the recount was that certain ballot papers which were in favour of Muthukumaraswami Naidu should have been rejected under Rule 57(2) (e) of the Electoral Rules. That provision is as follows:

"57(2) The Returning Officer shall reject a ballot paper:—

- (a) If it does not bear any mark which it should have borne under the provisions of sub-rule (2) of Rule 27".

This ground of rejection is not intelligible without reference to Rule 27(2) which runs thus:

"Every ballot paper shall before issue to an elector be stamped with such distinguishing mark as the Election Commission may direct".

Rule 57(2) contains a proviso which is in the following terms:

"Provided that where the Election Commission on being satisfied that any such defect as is mentioned in Clause (d) or Clause (e) has, in respect of any of the ballot papers at a polling station, been caused by any mistake or failure on the part of the Presiding Officer or Polling Officer, has directed that the defect should be overlooked, a ballot paper shall not be rejected merely on the ground of such defect".

The learned Tribunal found the defect mentioned in Clause (e) of Rule 57(2) in a number of ballot papers polled for the appellant and the respondent. Clause (e) speaks of the absence of the mark which the ballot papers should have borne under the provisions of Rule 27(2). Now it is obvious that this defect can occur in the following contingencies, namely:—

- (1) Where there is no mark whatever;
- (2) When there is a distinguishing mark prescribed by the Election Commission under Rule 27(2) whilst the ballot paper contains other marks;
- (3) When there is a wrong distinguishing mark of the polling station; and
- (4) the distinguishing mark might show signs of interpolation or correction.

The learned Tribunal gave a classified list of ballot papers in respect of which there was a defect mentioned in Rule 57(2)(e). The following is that list:

	Petitioner	Respondent
1. Ballot papers without the distinguishing marks of the polling station	249	198
2. Ballot papers bearing the distinguishing marks of two polling stations.	36	11
3. Ballot papers bearing wrong distinguishing marks of polling stations.	43	nil
4. Correction of the number in the rubber seal of the ballot papers.	13	nil

All the above ballot papers had been counted by the Returning Officer as valid. The reason why the Returning Officer presumably did not reject these papers is to be found in the Circular issued by the Election Commissioner to which we shall briefly refer. On 20th February, 1957 the Election Commission issued what is described as a statutory order, which in so far as it is material, is as follows:—

"Under the proviso to the above mentioned Clause (e) of sub-rule (2) of Rule 57

The Election Commission hereby directs that in every case where the returning Officer is satisfied that the distinguishing mark has not been stamped on a ballot paper in accordance with the commission's directions on account of any mistake or failure on the part of the Presiding Officer or Polling Officer, but the ballot paper is one which was authorised for use at the particular polling station was in fact issued to an elector at that polling station during the poll, the said defect, shall be overlooked and no ballot paper shall be rejected by a Returning Officer merely on the ground of such defect.

The Commission further directs that the returning Officer of every constituency shall report to the Commission the total number of ballot papers which were found not to bear the appropriate distinguishing mark but which were accepted as valid and counted on the authority of the present directions of the Commission".

On 28th February, 1957 the Election Commission issued another direction in ratification of the directions given earlier. By it every case where a ballot paper did not bear the distinguishing mark was not rejected and the defect was overlooked was to be reported to the Commission for its formal approval. The counting of the votes was however not to be suspended till receipt of the order from the Commission. On 13th March, 1957 there was a further direction by the Election Commission that is somewhat important, namely, that without holding up the declaration of the result pending reference by the Returning Officer to the Election Commission, it would be safer to have the formal order of the Election Commission in respect of such individual constituency in this regard, that is, in the curing of the defect, set out in Rule 57(2)(e). Of course these formal orders by the Commission would be ex post facto. It is true that it was made clear that the Election Commission would exercise such power and pass formal orders only on two essential conditions being satisfied, namely, (1) that the ballot papers concerned were authorised for use at the particular polling station and (2) that they were in fact issued to the electors at that Polling Station during the poll. As regards the present elections, the Returning Officer did report to the Commission on 12th March, 1957 that 1053 ballot papers did not contain the distinguishing mark but the defect was overlooked and the ballot papers were counted as valid. The Returning Officer requested that his action may be approved. He followed this with a communication stating that all the ballot papers concerned were authorised for use at the particular polling station and in fact issued to the electors at the concerned polling stations during the poll. On 24th March, 1957, the Election Commission sent the following communication to the Returning Officer:

"I am directed to refer to your letters dated 12th and 16th March, 1957, and to state that the Commission is satisfied that the absence of the appropriate distinguishing mark on the ballot papers mentioned therein used at the election in the Cuddalore parliamentary constituency and referred to in your letter was caused by the bonafide mistake or failure on the part of the concerned Presiding Officer or Polling Officer. The Commission accordingly approves your action in overlooking the said defect in accordance with the directions of the Election Commission under the Proviso to Sub-Rule (2) of Rule 57 of the Representation of the People (Conduct of Elections and Election Petitions) Rules, 1956, and in not rejecting any such ballot paper merely on the ground of such defect".

It was contended on behalf of the appellant before the Election Tribunal that the Election Commission had no power to express its satisfaction under the proviso c.e post facto, and that the Election Commission could not delegate its function to the Returning Officer. The learned Tribunal did not accept this contention of the appellant. He was of the opinion that the Election Commission did not express its satisfaction in advance nor had delegated any of its powers to the Returning Officer nor had substituted the satisfaction of the Returning Officer in the place of its satisfaction. In his view the Commission had reserved to itself the right to approve the ballot papers in question. The Tribunal held that the Election Commission was well within its rights in asking for a report from the Returning Officer whether the ballot papers were authorised to be issued to the polling stations in question and thus satisfy itself about it on the basis of the report of the Returning Officer. Mr. Panchapakesa Ayyar once more pressed before us the above contention which was rejected by the Election Tribunal. We see considerable force in this contention. It is obvious that the proviso contemplates the satisfaction of the Election Commission as the basis of the curing of the defect. The language does not admit of any other construction. According to the proviso, it is only when the Election Commission felt satisfied that the defect had been caused by mistake or failure on the part of the polling office or presiding Officer that the defect should be overlooked. It may be, that before coming to a conclusion on the matter, the Election Commission might call for a report from the Returning Officer or the presiding Officer or the polling officer or from all of them. Ordinarily the Election Commission might see no reason not to accept their reports. But in a proper case there may be circumstances which would compel the Election Commission to reject these reports and to accept the report of other responsible Officers, say of the Police Department. The advance orders issued by the Election Commission that in every case where the Returning Officer is satisfied that the distinguishing mark has not been stamped on the ballot paper on account of any mistake on the part of the presiding Officer or polling Officer, the said defect shall be overlooked and no ballot paper shall be rejected by the Returning Officer merely on the ground of such defect appear to us to be in the nature of an advance approval of the action of the Returning Officer and an expression of the satisfaction of the Commission based merely on the suggestion of the Returning Officer. The fact that the Election Commission further directed the Returning Officer to report to the Commission every case where such defect was overlooked by the Returning Officer does not improve matters because it is obvious that what the Election Commission expected to do was only to give its formal approval to the action of the Returning Officer. Vide Exhibit C-3 and C-4. There is no indication whatever that the Commission might in a proper case disapprove of the action of a Returning Officer, nor as to what should happen if in any case the Election Commission should so disapprove. It must not be overlooked that the submission of the report by the Returning Officer and the formal orders of approval to be issued by the Election Commission would not hold up the declaration of the results. This direction by the Election Commission that the declaration of the result should not be held up pending reference by the Returning Officers to the Election Commission as regards the particular defect conclusively shows that the orders of the Election Commission on the action of the Returning Officer are expected to be only formal and would in no case upset the declaration of the results.

We are clearly of opinion that the power conferred by the proviso cannot be exercised after declaration of the result of the Election. The Election Commission cannot in advance express its satisfaction that the defect was caused by mistake or failure on the part of the presiding Officer or polling officer and therefore cannot direct that the defect should be overlooked. We can realise that if the counting and scrutiny and returning of the results were to be suspended till the Election Commission expresses its opinion whether the defect should or should not be overlooked, there would be great delay which is not in consonance with the scheme of elections. But that is no reason for practically substituting the satisfaction of the Returning Officer in place of the satisfaction of the Election Commission. The proviso may well be amended so as to give the power to the Returning Officer in proper cases to overlook the defect mentioned in Clause (e) of Rule 57(2). We are unable to agree with the Election Tribunal that the power conferred on the Election Commission by the proviso can be exercised ex post facto.

The fact however remains that even in this view the appellant cannot succeed. We have already given above the list of ballot papers which did not bear the distinguishing mark which they should have borne under the provisions of sub-rule (2) of Rule 27. At the time of the argument there was some uncertainty as to the actual distinguishing mark prescribed by the Election Commission under Rule 27(2); but it is clear from the judgment of the Tribunal that the distinguishing mark which was a rubber seal, included the number of the respective polling station. If therefore the number of the polling station is an integral part of the distinguishing mark, a mistake in the number of the polling station would render the ballot paper defective under Rule 57(2)(e). This point is concluded by the ruling of the Supreme Court in Hari Vishnu Vs. Ahmad Isaque<sup>1</sup>. There the ballot papers relating to two different polling stations got mixed up. The result, according to the Supreme Court, was that the ballot paper which did not contain the distinguishing mark in respect of a particular polling station was invalid. The Supreme Court there pointed out that if any alteration of the original distinguishing mark is made, and it can be made, it must be made before the commencement of the poll and its approval by the Election Commission subsequent to the polling could not render valid the ballot papers which did not bear the distinguishing marks prescribed. It is a matter of common knowledge that the proviso to Rule 57(2)(e) was introduced as a result of this decision of the Supreme Court; but the principle remains unaffected, namely, that a wrong polling number would render the ballot paper invalid on the ground that it did not bear the distinguishing mark which it should have borne under sub-rule (2) of Rule 27 and that the defect cannot be cured by the approval of the Election Commission subsequent to the counting. It follows that not only ballot papers which did not contain any distinguishing mark as prescribed by Rule 27(2), but also ballot papers which bore distinguishing marks of two polling stations, ballot papers with wrong distinguishing marks, that is to say, wrong number of the polling station, and ballot papers in which the number appears to have been corrected, that is, which had been tampered with—all these ballot papers would be ballot papers having the defect set out in Rule 57(2)(e) and in our view they should all have been rejected and ex post facto approval of the Election Commission could not cure the defect from which they suffered. If the number of such ballot papers is deducted from the total number of ballot papers polled by the Petitioner and the first respondent it is common ground that the appellant would lose 341 while the respondent would lose only 309 votes. That would leave the respondent with more votes than the votes obtained by the appellant, in the aggregate. Assuming that our view on the construction of the proviso is wrong, then the position would be that all these ballot papers were validly counted on behalf of the respective candidates. Even then the result would be that the respondent would secure more votes than the appellant. So, in any view, whether these ballot papers are discarded or accepted as valid, the result of the election would not be affected because there would be a greater number of votes polled in favour of the respondent than in favour of the appellant. The Election Tribunal was therefore right in dismissing the petition on its finding that on a result of recounting and scrutiny the first respondent has acquired a majority, and therefore was rightly declared to be the successful candidate. The appeal fails and is dismissed; but there will be no order as to costs. A copy of this judgment will be sent to the Election Commission.
